INTRODUCTION

During the Heritage Week 2008 under the supervision of Simon Large County Archaeologist a number of volunteers met in the village of Cross, West Clare. Our purpose was to record all dwellings, modern and vernacular, along two selected routes.

We were interested in the survival/condition of earlier, c.1840-1860 dwellings and their relationship to the landscape as well as the relationship of more recent/modern dwelling to the landscape.

Each dwelling was photographed externally, and when appropriate internally. A simple plan of each dwelling was also completed. Finally, a standard recording form was used to describe each dwelling noting particular items of interest. The location of each dwelling was confirmed on a map. During the writing up the locations were converted to Irish Grid references.

This was a one day survey conducted by a small group of people on a day of mixed weather; however some interesting trends were identified. Nearly all early dwellings were situated near the road. The majority were parallel to the road; however when the dwelling was exposed to the coast the gable-end faced the sea. The majority were single storey. All though the sample was small, a significant number of the early dwellings were still occupied.

The more recently constructed dwellings were set back from the road occasionally a considerable distance. Most dwellings were 1½ or 2 storey construction. The orientation of the modern dwellings was consistently parallel to the road.

A more extended survey of the region could possibly provide sufficient data for statically reliable conclusions, possibly confirming the earlier limited conclusions. While surveys of a similar size and nature, in different regions of Clare, could highlight similarities and differences.
